Letters to the Editor

Don't move the Post Office

To The Editor:

I could not agree more with Olga Gallinot's sentiments (December 8, Letter to the Editor) regarding the planned relocation of the Carbondale Post Office.

Being an interested former resident and a frequent visitor, I feel that relocating the post office is, at this time of high inflation, an unwise move, both economically and geographically.

The monies alloted for the new post office could be diverted towards improving the present structure, with installation of sophisticated mailing equipment, thus facilitating mailing efficiency.

I always admired this building as a youngster growing up. It is one of the last remaining buildings with its unique architectural design and beauty.

Let's face it ... "they don't make them like that anymore."

K. Cresho
Syracuse, New York